Moussawi slams March 14's "sectarian incitement"

Loyalty to the Resistance bloc MP Nawwaf Moussawi said on Sunday that worries of the possibility of domestic strife were a result of the policy of "sectarian incitement" by March 14, the National News Agency reported.

"The [fears] of a fragile security situation and the possibility of domestic wars are caused by the policy of sectarian incitement that [March 14 adopts] through its officials, MPs and media," Moussawi said.

The MP also commented on recent events in Tripoli and said that clashes in the northern city occurred because of "incitement, tension, suspicious security acts and foreign infiltrations of security."

Clashes in Tripoli between two rival neighborhoods - Jabal Mohsen and Bab al-Tabbaneh - have left at least 14 people dead and more than 40 people injured since Friday.

Moussawi also slammed March 14 for criticizing Hezbollah's weapons, saying: "Before calling to try the Resistance for [possessing] weapons, [let] the Lebanese people try you for your dereliction in protecting the country."

"[Let them try you] for your sectarian policy that places Lebanon on the edge of a civil war, and for your economic policy that starved people," the Hezbollah MP added.
